Web designers: did you know that you're also digital sign designers? With Rise Vision's HTML5-based platform, you can bring your existing skills to a new and still largely untapped market.

Expand your web design business through the Rise Vision store by offering your services to a whole new market, namely, digital sign owners who need compelling, eye-catching content on their displays.

You're seeing large electronic displays everywhere now, right? Restaurants, coffee shops, banks, airports, schools, libraries, stores, offices, lobbies and public areas of all sorts now have big digital signs on their walls to attract their visitors' attentions. Any brick-and-mortar business with foot traffic can benefit from digital signage, and if they don't already have it on their walls, it's likely just because they lack the time, expertise, and resources to create great content for it.

That's where you come in. Every sign needs great content, and if that sign is powered by the Rise Vision platform, there's a real opportunity for you to create its content using the same skills that you use to create websites.

Send your web pages to physical, on-premise displays.
With Rise Vision's HTML5-based platform, there's no difference between designing for the web and designing for large digital signs. That's right: anything that you can create for display on a website can also be displayed on a Rise Vision-powered digital sign. You have full control over the design via HTML and CSS, and the Rise Vision Platform delivers your web page to the on-premise display based on a user-defined schedule that specifies the time and location of each appearance.

Help businesses create better digital signage.
By expanding your services to include digital sign design, you can help business owners deliver content to their walls that's just as well designed and compelling as the content on their websites. Only a small fraction of web designers and agencies actually offer digital sign design services, and yet the demand for well-crafted sign content is at all-time high.

There are three ways to expand your business into the growing area of digital sign design:

1. Expand what you offer your existing clients by taking the virtual presence you have already created for them on the web, and extending it to their physical displays as well. Too many businesses focus on driving customers to their location, but then do little to communicate to them once they've walked through the door. Convince your web clients that digital signage is the best way to utilize their existing web assets to communicate the same messages at their physical premises.

2. Offer your design services to new businesses who already own signage and use the Rise Vision platform. Many are looking for professional designers to help them create attractive content for their signs. Rise Vision allows you to create sub-accounts for each of your new signage clients, to keep them organized and easily accessible.

3. Create digital signage web page templates and sell them as products in the Rise Vision store. This can be an important new source of passive income for your web design business.

It's a rapidly-growing market.
The Rise Vision user base is large and growing rapidly. As of this moment, we have xx,xxx Rise Vision accounts, xxx of which were added just yesterday, and we are in xxx countries. Every user has direct access to the Rise Vision store, and as a featured provider of services or content, you gain exposure to new clients around the world, and a competitive advantage over all of the web designers who aren't offering digital sign design.
